Award-winning artist Lorraine McFarland works primarily in pastel, but also works in colored pencil, acrylic, oil, and watercolor. She has studied with many well-known artists including Richard McKinley, Maggie Price and Liz Haywood-Sullivan.

Lorraine describes herself as a late bloomer. Her path to artistic success was long and winding. She went to college with a declared major in art. However, when she saw what the other students could do, she gave it up, thinking she was not talented enough.

After many years, and a number of careers, she found herself back at the easel with a newfound confidence.

Lorraine lives in Rolla, Missouri where the beautiful Missouri Ozarks inspire her work.

She teaches drawing and painting in her studio and welcomes commissions for pet or people portraits or any other subject.
